PINARD, THE CATERER, DEAD.
New York Times (1857-1922); Oct 17, 1883; ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times
pg. 5

PINARD, THE CATERER, DEAD.

Jean Baptiste Pinard, the well-known caterer, died suddenly yesterday morning at his residence, No. 6 East Fifteenth-street, of heart disease. He was apparently in good health on Monday night when he retired, but when he awakened yesterday he complained of pains around his heart. His physicians, Dr. Benjamin F. Dorson and Dr. J. H Anderson, were at once sent for, but before they arrived he was dead.

Mr. Pinard was born at L'Isle d'Adam, Seine-et-Oise, France, in 1822. He emigrated in 1841, coming to this City. He remained here a few years, and then went to Ogdensburg, N. Y., and opened a restaurant and hotel. He was quite successful until the panic of 1857, when he failed. He then came to New-York, and in 1869 he started with his sons the house of J. B. Pinard & Sons, in West Eleventh-street, near Broadway. After being in that locality three years he removed to East Fifteenth-street, directly back of Tiffany's, and two years afterward he removed to the present location of the firm. Three years ago he retired from business, leaving the establishment to his sons, Jean, Charles, and Narcisse Pinard, who have retained the firm name. Pinard was one of the most successful caterers of New-York. He adopted an entirely new plan, not having any restaurant or hotel in connection with his place, simply serving collations in private houses and having a dining-hall where dinners could be given. A large number of notable dinners have been given there. His body will be interred in Greenwood Cemetery.

Reproduced with permission of the copyright owner. Further reproduction prohibited without permission.